Course Description

‘God saw everything that he had made, and indeed, it was very good’ (Genesis 1.31).

What went wrong?

Across the globe so many socio-political values have their origins in religious ethical systems. Historically Christian moral theology has been uniquely powerful in providing structure and content to political and legal systems across the western and colonial worlds. The authors of Genesis present us with the first commands of the Creator to humanity, “Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth and subdue it...” (Gen.1.28). In the past these words have been taken as a free pass for universal exploitation of resources: animal, vegetable and mineral.

When we look beyond this paradigm of dominance for humanity’s stewardship, grounded on an ‘othering’ of the created world, we uncover alternative worldviews which offer holistic rather than hierarchical models and place humanity within nature rather than apart from it.

The first part of THEO 204 introduces the concepts and definitions of ‘religion’, ‘ethics’ and ‘ecological crisis’ to clarify the basic parameters for our studies. We then take a brief journey through history to uncover the process whereby religious ethics evolved to designate the human species as a phenomenon apart from the rest of the material world.

Conversely, we’ll examine alternative historical movements within Christian culture which were challenging this hierarchical notion of humanity over nature. Examples include Francis of Assisi, founder of the Franciscan movement and Hildegard of Bingen, polymath, mystic and visionary.

Before moving on to the cyclical and timeless worldviews of Asian religious/cultural contexts, we’ll study the Islamic ethical traditions and contemporary Muslim ecological initiatives, namely, Al-Mizan. Turning to Hinduism and Buddhism we explore notions of re-birth which fuse humanity as one with the natural world. How does this status of humanity impact on ethics towards non-human life and ecology?

Cyclical and non-time bound traditions share elements of their world views with indigenous traditions whose spirituality is bound to the earth, to their particular piece of land on this earth. This connection to a particular sacred place is rooted in a relationship of mutual dependence/mutual survival. We’ll be studying examples of these traditions from the Americas and Australia, examining their ethical understanding and approach to nature, as well as the impact colonialism has had on these values, beliefs and practices.

Within this frame of holistic approaches to ecology we’ll investigate ecofeminism - a contemporary movement, originating in the West towards the end of the twentieth century. Its critiques of the environmental crisis, and its application of practical remedies, reflect the integration of ecology, feminism and spirituality.

JOHN FELICE ROME CENTER

In conclusion we'll reflect on the impact the ecological crisis has had on the value systems of 'linear'/time-bound traditional religions. Are beliefs and values essential to indigenous spiritual traditions informing major religious traditions? Here we'll look closely at Pope Francis' ecological initiative – 'Integral Ecology', outlined in Laudato Si', and examine how this evolves from the theology of St Francis, while maintaining humanity as unique in the natural world, but also intrinsically connected to all of God's creation.

Learning Outcomes

On completion of the course students should be able to:

Students who successfully complete this course will have:

- Developed their academic skills to construct a well-informed argument in writing and oral presentation
- Demonstrated their critical skills to evaluate secondary sources in relation to primary texts
- Identified and explained key issues in approaches to ecology from religious ethical, historical and global perspectives
- Understood diversities and similarities of religious ethical approaches to ecology across global spiritual traditions
- Demonstrated awareness of global faith-based initiatives addressing the ecological crisis
- Synthesized information from a variety of academic disciplines as it relates to the impact of the ecological crisis around the world

Required Text / Materials

All assigned readings are posted on Sakai

Attendance Policy

In accordance with the Rome Center mission to promote a higher level of academic rigor, and in compliance with full-time student visa status, all courses adhere to the following attendance policy.

Prompt attendance, preparation and active participation in course discussions are expected from every student and synonymous with academic success. Attendance is mandatory at every class meeting for each course. Lateness or leaving class early will impact the course grade at the professor's discretion. All absences, including medical absences, will be treated the same, unless they are documented long-term conditions or emergencies. Such situations will be evaluated case-by-case by the Academic Affairs office.

Once-a-week classes:

- After 1 absence, a 2% final grade reduction will be applied for each missed class.
- Missing 3 classes or more will result in an automatic failure (F).

The Project is a central feature on THEO 204. Your project, selected in consultation and supervised during the second half of the course, will provide a unique opportunity to delve in depth into a case study which illustrates a particular aspect of religious ethics and ecology. These projects can investigate theologies and spiritualities of the past and the present to evaluate how they measure up to the needs and expectations for the future of the planet.

Readings and Responses

For each class you will be given questions in advance attached to each week's Lesson Page on Sakai. These are based on the reading/s for that week.

Your responses to these questions and readings together with discussions in your groups in class will prepare you for the Midterm and Final exams. The aim of these exercises is to ensure that you are consistently building on your knowledge base and developing your reflections in this subject, as well as honing your skills in critical reading and analysis.

Academic Integrity

Plagiarism and other forms of academic misconduct are unacceptable at the Rome Center and will be dealt with in accordance with Loyola University Chicago's guidelines. Please familiarize yourself with Loyola's standards here: <https://catalog.luc.edu/academic-standards-regulations/undergraduate/>. You are responsible to comply with the LUC University Catalog.
