Biographical History

Marion Jean Kennedy was born on November 27, 1934, the daughter of Marion Mitchell and Edward Kennedy. Growing up on the south side of Chicago, she attended Maria High School and came to the north side of the city to attend and graduate from Mundelein College. She married Camillo Volini, and they raised their five children in the Lakewood-Balmoral neighborhood of Chicago. Until she entered politics, she was a teacher and speech therapist at the Chicago Public Schools. In the 1960s, Volini collaborated in the formation of a neighborhood organization, the Lakewood Balmoral Residents Council. Volini is most known for serving as alderman of Chicago's 48th Ward for three terms in 1978-1987. Volini served under Jane Byrne, the first woman mayor, and Harold Washington, the first African American mayor.

Her first venture into city politics presented itself in 1974 when 48th Ward Alderman Marilou Hedlund announced that she would not run for re-election. Marion Volini ran against Arnold Levy and Dennis Block in 1975 and lost. However, she had won recognition as a community leader. She was asked to run for President of the Edgewater Community Council, which she won in an uncontested election.

When Alderman Dennis Block resigned after two years, a Special Election was announced with a primary and a run-off. Volini was on the ballot as an Independent who had the support of both the Democratic and Republican organizations. After a campaign involving all of Volini's family, Marion Volini was elected as the new Alderman of the 48th Ward to finish the unexpired term of the former Alderman.

Marion Kennedy Volini was formally inducted into her office as Alderman of Chicago's 48th Ward on July 7, 1978. The 48th Ward is a political district on the North Side that (as of 2023) extends from Lake Michigan west to Clark St. and from 4700 North to 6200 North and includes parts of the Edgewater neighborhood, part of Uptown until 1980, and the Andersonville neighborhoods. Citing personal experience and informal demographics, Alderman Volini described the diversity of her area: "My community, on the very far north side lakefront, consists of the very rich and the very poor, the very old and the very young. We have families with children, and we have young couples and singles. The residents of my community are black, white, Hispanic, and Asian American, and compose one of the few stable integrated communities in Chicago... The housing in the 48th ward includes high-rise condominiums, elegant Victorian homes, and beautiful rehabbed walk-up apartments. But we also have large common-corridor buildings, subsidized high-rise structures, and a number of deteriorated vacant buildings" (quote found in Series 8: Speeches Box 28, Folder 7 "Collected Speeches and Appearances for Marion K. Volini, undated").

Volini was one of 50 Alderman that made up the Chicago City Council. She focused on improving neighborhood safety, housing rehabilitation, commercial revitalization, traffic congestion, as well as the prevention of lakefront erosion. She sponsored legislation concerning playground safety and prostitution. As Chairperson of the City Council's Committee on Aging and Disabled, her efforts worked toward improving services and accessibility for senior citizens and people with disabilities.

Volini was involved in the political conflict known as the Council Wars, which took place in the Chicago City Council 1983-1986. During Harold Washington's first term as mayor, 29 of the 50 aldermen in the city council voted together in opposition of the mayor, causing government gridlock. In a confrontation during Washington's first City Council meeting in April, Mayor Washington adjourned the session. His opponent, Alderman Edward Vrdolyak, continued the meeting after Washington and his supporters left the chambers and made committee appointments. Volini was the only one of Washington's supporters to remain. The next day Volini presented a compromise proposal for City Council Committee chairmanships to the mayor and made efforts to mediate between the two groups. Later the Mayor appointed Volini as the only woman on the Washington six-member negotiating team. Her warning to the City Council was quoted in Time magazine on May 23, 1983: "This is chaos. The sooner we get it under control, the better." The city government was in a stalemate for four weeks before the two sides reached a consensus. Later, Volini said that her motivation in assuming a leading role in this City Council dispute was her belief that power should be distributed equally and that no one should be excluded from the governmental process because of race or political ideology.

At the conclusion of her third term as Alderman, Volini opened her own real estate company, Lakefront Group. She continued to serve the City as a mayoral appointee to the Metropolitan Pier and Exposition Authority, which has under its jurisdiction Navy Pier and McCormick Place. In her later years, she continued to live in the Lakewood-Balmoral neighborhood.

Marion Kennedy Volini passed away May 21, 2018, at the age of 83.
